

We Shall Overcome

Today we are all here, and yes, segregation fighter MLK, Jr said that there is still hope. Okay, I know our yesterday was bad. but we can overcome. In fact, one of the country's greatest leaders himself said, "We shall overcome," and we still have hope. Yes, people have tried to stop us, but we did not let them, and I still believe we shall overcome.

We did overcome things we peacefully protested against, like the bus boycott. Let us join hands, take our yesterday and turn it into a new safer tomorrow.

For one, trust is the number one thing. So we need to start trusting everyone. Trust will help a lot. Second, it will make people more comfortable by sharing their money. People could donate their money to homeless shelters to help the needy. I feel that most of the needy people are people of color. We all need to have hope to help stop segregation, and to hold hands as one. I still have hope. Third, food drives can be held. And last, we can start over. I can focus on what is on the inside of people instead of the color skin that they have, and I can be a friend to everyone and help someone up if they fall and be there for them.

"We Shall Overcome Bullying, Injustice, and Inequality

Do you know Dr. King? Do you believe in his words? We the people of United States could learn a lot from Dr. King's life and experiences as they relate to bullying, injustice, and inequality issues.

First, peace is a period without war or fighting. One way of making peace is by stopping kids from bullying other kids in schools. It is imperative for kids to feel a sense of peace and self-worth. Nobody should feel that they are more powerful than others. In fact, nobody should think that they are useless. Instead, they should think that they are important in our world.

Next, justice is all about fairness and treating one another with respect. A way that humans could make justice is by paying for their crimes. It would not be fair if people did not pay for the crimes that they commit. Dr. King was the type of leader that believed everyone deserve to be treated with dignity because what if somebody committed a crime and did pay for their crime.

Finally, we are going to talk about equality. Equality means alike and same. One way of equality is treating others is treating them with kindness. Dr. King is a great example for us because he did not treat others differently.

Well that is all about We Shall Overcome Bullying, Injustice, and Inequality. While reading this we learned about Dr. King.

We Shall Overcome.

I believe that we shall overcome segregation. I believe that we can help one another. Say you see someone that is lonely, you can say, "Do you want to play with me?" No matter what his or her skin color is and become friends. I can do a speech saying that no matter what skin color you are, everyone is beautiful. If you see someone fall down, help them up. If you disagree with someone, don't start violence discuss it with them. I will make new friends by saying, "I do not care what you look like, you are still beautiful."

We can change the world by marching down streets, in a peaceful protest. Even today we are still fighting with our fists. Don't fight with fists; fight with words. Fight like MLK, Jr. did. He did not fight violently, he fought peacefully. Think of his speeches and see how you can change the world today.

I believe that everyone can make a difference. I believe that everyone should be treated equally. I believe that I can make more friends. I believe that everyone is beautiful. I have a dream that hope and peace can beat violence. I believe tomorrow we can make a difference. I believe that segregation is wrong. I believe we can change the world. Everyone is important in their own way, and in their own special way. Peaceful protest is the key to peace and love.
